Armor Dynamics in line for fed money

KINGSTON - U.S. Rep. Maurice Hinchey, D-Hurley, announced Monday he has secured $2 million in federal funds for Armor Dynamics to expand its research capabilities here.

The investment leads to between five and 10 new jobs at the company and "puts Armor Dynamics in a very good position to win future military contracts that will create a significant number of additional jobs in our area," Hinchey said.

Armor Dynamics makes a composite armoring material it calls MagmaCore that is lightweight.

"This appropriation will allow Armor Dynamics to install a state-of-the-art ballistic research laboratory where we can aggressively work on solutions for the everyday threats faced by soldiers," Armor Dynamics CEO David Warren said in Hinchey's news release.

Hinchey said the money is in the fiscal year 2010 appropriations bill the House of Representatives is to consider this week. He sits on the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Defense. The Senate still needs to pass its own version of the bill, he said, adding the House actions are usually "the most critical steps in the process."
